

Keeshond

Level 3

The Keeshond is full of personality, affectionate and friendly. An excellent children's companion, lively, intelligent and very alert. This breed is generally good with other pets. Keeshonds like to bark, which makes them good watchdogs because of its notable gift for warning of danger. They can be trained to perform. To keep the Keeshond in good balance, daily walks are needed.

Health Problems: Prone to hip dysplasia, skin problems and heart disease. Very demanding exercise will cause trick knee to develop. Beware of overfeeding; the Keeshond will gain weight easily.

Boxer

Level 3

Highly intelligent, the Boxer is happy, playful and curious, but can be stubborn and sneaky. They bond closely with their families and get along well with children. It is believed that their name originated from the way that they like to use their front paws for everything, in an almost cat-like way. They make excellent watchdogs, as their nature is to protect you, your family and your home.

Health Problems: The Boxer may have Cardiomyopathy and subaortic stenosis. After the age of eight, they are more prone to tumors than any other breed. Their digestive systems may cause them to suffer from excessive flatulence.

Bulldog

Level 4

The Bulldog is kind and resolute. They are courageous, but not vicious or aggressive. With their dignified manner, they are among the most gentle of dogs. They are dependable and known for their courage and guarding abilities. They can be very persistent, especially in seeking out attention.

Health Problems: Bulldogs may suffer from allergies and breathing problems. They often have poor eyesight. They are susceptible to extremes in temperature, and should be monitored closely. Their digestive systems are very active, which may result in flatulence. They are also prone to joint problems.

Mastiff Level 4

Self-confident, brave, patient and loyal, the Mastiff is intelligent and dignified. They rarely bark, but will defend their territory, usually by holding strangers at bay rather than attacking. They are normally excellent with children, but not recommended for toddlers, due to their size.

Health Problems: As with most large breeds, the Mastiff is prone to elbow and hip dysplasia. They may suffer from bloat, so should be fed two or three small meals each day rather than one large one. They may develop Progressive Retinal Atrophy (PRA).

Pembroke Welsh Corgi Level 4

The Pembroke Welsh Corgi is highly intelligent, devoted and protective. They are very active dogs and are generally good with children. They are good "alarm" dogs, as they tend to bark a lot. They may attempt to herd people by nipping at their heels, but can be trained not to do this.

Health Problems: Prone to glaucoma. The Pembroke Welsh Corgi should not be overfed, as they tend to gain weight easily, which may lead to back problems.

Staffordshire Bull Terrier Level 4

The Staffordshire Bull Terrier does everything full throttle: play, work and love. It is extremely courageous and obedient, affectionate with a sense of humor. It is usually good with other pets in the household, but without a stern, human pack leader giving timely corrections when needed, they may be combative with dogs outside the family.

Health Problems: They are prone to complaints such as cataracts, HC & PHPV. Hip dysplasia is occasionally seen and so are tumors. Puppies are prone to having an elongated soft palate.
